By Epicurus For the past decade some of the world's leading thinkers have focused on the "Rise of China" looking at SOEs and the visible hand of the Chinese all powerful state, yet few have assessed the meteoric rise of China's private Internet behemoths, companies like Tencent, Xiaomi, Alibaba. In this book Ying Lowrey, is examining authoritatively the contribution of Alibaba to the Chinese economy and makes a convincing argument that the future prosperity of China will be dependent on the forces of grassroots entrepreneurship that the Alibaba model has so effectively unleashed. "If Alibaba can prosper by unleashing grassroots entrepreneurship, so can the nation" the author argues. Encompassing years of experience as a Chinese scholar excelling in U.S. academia and supporting the research of the U.S. small business administration Professor Lowrey is no amateur. Combining theoretical competency with grassroots research through the networks of Tsinghua University and Ali Baba, Lowrey shows how Alibaba has created this hybrid grid of "Innopreneurship" transforming once impoverished villages to flourishing entrepreneurial communities (Taobao Villages) - an opinion seconded by Nobel Laureate Edmund Phelps who calls Alibaba's dynamism contagious and auspicious for the future path of the Chinese economy. To be sure the book is not only relevant to China watchers, MBA students or economists but also to strategic intellectuals who are worried about the structural shifts that globalization has produced and rising inequality in Western Republics. The book highlights that small is beautiful and that small business supported by a platform ecosystem like the Alibaba can unleash individual creativity and propel small scale production to world scale competitiveness. Alibaba is not offering free fish but it teaches people how to fish on a scale and pace never seen before and this book shows exactly how this is done. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful.
